

Trump trade war whiplash.

By: James R. Solloway, CFA, Chief Market Strategist and Senior Portfolio Manager

President Trump's trade war with two close U.S. allies and China is constantly in flux. Trump continues to impose, rescind, and revise tariffs at a dizzying pace, angering adversaries, baffling allies, befuddling investors, and roiling financial markets. Don't expect this campaign to end anytime soon.

A multi-front battle: Canada, Mexico, and China

In the military, campaigns are often characterized as large in scale and long in duration, encompassing a series of battles designed to achieve a specific objective. Trade wars can be discussed using similar vocabulary—and the war Trump has launched is just getting started.

The battlefield opened with tariff threats that materialized and disappeared so quickly that for a moment it seemed like the war was over before it began. With little warning and no time for a resolution via traditional diplomacy, Trump announced 25% across-the-board tariffs against Canada and Mexico, and additional tariffs on China (including a proposal to impose large fees on Chinese ships visiting U.S. ports). Mexico put some troops on the border, Canada paid lip service to the new administration in Washington, and China largely dismissed the whole thing, as tariffs have whipsawed between being in effect, paused, or with certain exclusions. On March 6 (the date of this writing), Trump announced an exemption through April 2 for tariffs on imported goods from Mexico that are covered by the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA).

The first salvo: What happened?

- Mexico: U.S. imposed a 25% tariff, automakers excluded (cars made in North America that comply with the continents existing free trade agreement).
- Canada: U.S. imposed a 25% tariff, automakers excluded
- China: An additional 10% tariff imposed on all goods.

Exhibit 1: Markets don't like it

Source: FactSet. Daily data through 3/4/2025.

What's next? The battlefield goes global

Not content to rest after attacking America's largest trading partners, Trump used his Congressional address to announce that he would impose reciprocal tariffs on every nation that trades with the U.S., effective April 2. It's a target-rich environment.

Exhibit 2: A crowded theater

Source: U.S. Census Bureau, SEI, as of 12/31/24.

Looking ahead:

- Pain for U.S. economy: It is likely the across-the-board tariffs of 25% will last only a few months given the pain that it will inflict on the U.S. economy.
- Higher Inflation: The Canadian economy may suffer most due to retaliatory tariffs and currency depreciation driving inflation higher.
- Reciprocal tariffs: The main event is April 2, when reciprocal tariffs are slated to be implemented by Trump, despite the International Chamber of Commerce warning that this could crash the world economy.

What to do?

The shock-and-awe approach to tariffs reflects the tone and tempo of Trump's second term. We anticipate more of the same in the weeks (and perhaps months) ahead.

Although tariffs are disconcerting, they are really no different than any other disruptive development (banking crisis, market correction, financial crisis, etc.) that temporarily pushes stock prices lower. For investors with a long-term perspective, there is no reason to make changes to a well thought-out investment plan—maintain well-diversified portfolios across asset classes, sectors, and global markets. Even in the short term, the situation is too fluid to make large tactical changes. For most investors, it makes sense to avoid making knee-jerk moves based on the latest news headlines.

Index definitions

The MSCI Canada Index tracks the performance of the large- and mid-cap segments of the Canada equity market.

The MSCI China Index tracks the performance of large- and mid-cap stocks in China.

The MSCI Mexico Index tracks the performance of the large- and mid-cap segments of the Mexican equity market.

The MSCI USA Index tracks the performance of the large- and mid-cap segments of the U.S. equity market.

Important information

This material represents an assessment of the market environment at a specific point in time and is not intended to be a forecast of future events or a guarantee of future results. All information as of the date indicated. There are risks involved with investing, including possible loss of principal. This information should not be relied upon by the reader as research or investment advice, (unless you have otherwise separately entered into a written agreement with SEI for the provision of investment advice) nor should it be construed as a recommendation to purchase or sell a security. The reader should consult with their financial professional for more information.

Statements that are not factual in nature, including opinions, projections and estimates, assume certain economic conditions and industry developments and constitute only current opinions that are subject to change without notice.

Certain economic and market information contained herein has been obtained from published sources prepared by other parties, which in certain cases have not been updated through the date hereof. While such sources are believed to be reliable, neither SEI nor its affiliates assumes any responsibility for the accuracy or completeness of such information and such information has not been independently verified by SEI.

Index returns are for illustrative purposes only and do not represent actual investment performance. Index performance returns do not reflect any management fees, transaction costs or expenses. Indexes are unmanaged, and one cannot invest directly in an index. Past performance does not guarantee future results.

This material is not directed to any persons where (by reason of that person's nationality, residence or otherwise) the publication or availability of this material is prohibited. Persons in respect of whom such prohibitions apply must not rely on this information in any respect whatsoever.

The information contained herein is for general and educational information purposes only and is not intended to constitute legal, tax, accounting, securities, research or investment advice regarding the strategies or any security in particular, nor an opinion regarding the appropriateness of any investment.

The views contained herein are not to be taken as advice or a recommendation to buy or sell any investment in any jurisdiction. Our outlook contains forward-looking statements that are judgments based upon our current assumptions, beliefs, and expectations. If any of the factors underlying our current assumptions, beliefs or expectations change, our statements as to potential future events or outcomes may be incorrect. We undertake no obligation to update our forward-looking statements.

Information in the U.S. is provided by SEI Investments Management Corporation (SIMC), a wholly owned subsidiary of SEI Investments Company (SEI).

Information in Canada is provided by SEI Investments Canada Company, a wholly owned subsidiary of SEI Investments Company (SEI), and the Manager of the SEI Funds in Canada.